PRASAD Dental Care programs in India and the United States

Whether in India or the US, the poorest people face the same challenge: they are most at risk for dental disease, yet they are also least able to access dental health care.

For example, in India's Tansa Valley, impoverished villagers suffer from dental disease because of poor nutrition, lack of awareness of oral hygiene and inability to reach and pay for dental care.

To respond to this need, PRASAD launched the Shree Muktananda Dental Van in 1991, and added a dental clinic to the Anaukampaa Health Center in 2003.

Sadly, even basic dental care is also beyond the reach of many families in the US, including Sullivan County, New York, where a 1995 study showed that 75 percent of the county's children from low-income homes needed immediate dental care.

The PRASAD Project responded by establishing PRASAD Children's Dental Health Program to fill that great need.

Shobhana suffered from dental pain until a friend suggested she come to PRASAD's dental clinic. There, doctors relieved her pain and restored her smile with new dentures.
